

LEGION ROBBER CONVICTED; ASKS FOR NEW TRIAL

Harry Leggerie, Philadelphia,
Found Guilty of Planning Robbery

CAUGHT BY THE POLICE

Chief Jones and Officers
Rounded Up Entire Gang

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 20.—Harvey Schaffer, Steinsburg, Bucks county farmer, and his wife, Margaret, were convicted yesterday in the criminal court of Bucks county by a jury before Judge Calvin S. Boyer of stealing hundreds of chickens from farmers in the Quakertown, Richlandtown and Steinsburg sections.

Harry Leggerie, of Phila., was convicted yesterday for stealing money from the American Legion Home in Bristol. The jury found him guilty of burglary, felonious entry, larceny and receiving stolen goods. The case was tried before President Judge Hiram H. Keller and an application for a new trial was made this morning by Leggerie's attorney.

The home of Robert W. Bracken Post, No. 382, American Legion, on Radcliffe street, Bristol, was entered early on Sunday morning, March 27th. The canteen was broken into and looted.

Police Officer Spezzano arrested within a few hours after the robbery, a man giving the name of Adolph Estka, 19, 1720 N. Hope street, Philadelphia. He admitted his part in the robbery, March 31st, John Kreweski, 23, 3297 Gaul street, Philadelphia, was apprehended in Philadelphia by Chief Jones, Constable Thomas Crawford and Officer Nichols.

Early on the morning of April 1st, Anna Brownell, 22, 3257 Tulip street, was arrested at her home. She was brought to Bristol where she admitted to the officers that she drove the car for the two men under arrest. She pleaded ignorance of the robbery and told the police she merely drove the men to Bristol after being requested to do so by her "boy friend." She gave his name as Harry M. Leggerie, 6925 Hagerman street, Philadelphia.

The girl said that Leggerie came to her house Saturday evening, March 27, and asked her to drive two friends to Bristol. She agreed and was told that Leggerie and his two friends would be at her house later during the evening. They arrived after Miss Brownell had gone to bed. She got up, dressed and drove the men here.

Judge Boyer sentenced Schaffer to serve not less than seven or more than fifteen years in the Eastern State Penitentiary. His wife will be released on (Continued on Page 4)

WOMAN HURT

When an automobile skidded and turned over on the Lincoln Highway at Fallsington, this morning at three o'clock, Mrs. Louise Shee, 6971 Mott street, New York City, was injured. The woman was brought to Harriman Hospital where it was found she has fractures of several ribs. The driver of the machine, Roy May, 919 Race street, Philadelphia, and other occupants of the machine, were unhurt. The accident occurred, it is stated, when brakes were applied, then the machine skidded and turned over.

PRINCIPALS DISCUSS TOPICS OF INTEREST

Assisting in Promotion of Substitute Institute; Meet at Newtown

NINETEEN AT SESSION

NEWTOWN, Sept. 20.—Nineteen members of Bucks County Principals' Association gathered in the high school, here, last evening, to discuss items of general interest to those heading the public schools of the county. The meeting was presided over by C. Willard Shuster, president, and principal of the Newtown high school.

The informal discussion revolved mainly about the substitute plan, extension courses, etc. The Principals' Association is taking a most active part in the promoting of the substitute institute as arranged by J. H. Hoffman, superintendent of Bucks County Schools.

The principals present also evolved a plan for three sessions of the Bucks County Teachers' Association during this school term. It was decided to have "sectional" meetings, one being for rural teachers, one for those in charge of primary grades, and a third for secondary teachers. The committee in charge is headed by Dr. Carman Ross, Doylestown, president of the Teachers' Association. This committee will arrange the places of meeting as well as the dates.

The next gathering of the principals will occur at Doylestown on October 7th, in connection with the teachers' institute.

NOW ON TRIAL

SENATOR JAMES J. DAVIS

Who is charged with reaping fortune from lotteries. He is accused by United States Attorney.

GOV'T. ATTEMPTS TO PROVE DAVIS PROFITED

Claim He Was Moving Force in Back of Alleged Lotteries

PROFITED, IS CHARGE

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 20.—The Government will attempt to prove that United States Senator James J. Davis, Pennsylvania, was the moving force in back of the alleged $3,000,000 lotteries conducted for the Mooseheart charity balls when the trial of the former secretary of labor under three presidents is resumed today.

Senator Davis is charged with violating the national lottery laws and is alleged to have profited through two lotteries to the extent of $172,000. Charles J. Margiotti, prominent Pennsylvania attorney and Charles H. Tuttle, former United States attorney of the defendant's legal staff denied the charges that the defendant profited personally from the sale of tickets from the charity balls.

The trial is on two indictments charging conspiracy and naming eight counts, in which transportation of lottery tickets from Pennsylvania to New York, are alleged.

Emphasizing to jurors that there is no criminal charge of wrongfully appropriating profits from alleged lotteries in the Loyd Order of Moose against Senator Davis, Louis M. Treadwell, assistant United States attorney, declared the Government nevertheless would prove Davis got thousands of dollars in profit from the project.

"We will show," he said, "that Senator Davis did derive profits from running the lotteries, because that is the most convincing proof he knew what was going on."

He said that two alleged lotteries, conducted in conjunction with the Moose charity balls of 1930 and 1931, brought in some $3,000,000.

After the first one, he said, three checks totalling $100,000 were drawn to the order of Fred W. Jones, "financial agent" for Davis, and used as payment on a note at the Fidelity Trust Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., which was the personal responsibility (Continued on Page 2)

Enterprise Garage, Agent, Hudson and Essex Cars

Announcement has been made that Enterprise Garage, William Warner, proprietor, is the new Bristol agency for the new Essex Terraplane, and the complete line of Hudson and Essex pacemakers.

The appointment of Enterprise Garage was "undertaken with the utmost care and consideration," states the company manufacturing these two popular cars. "Both executives and personnel are men in whose integrity and ability we have every confidence. We are certain that their dealings with the motoring public will add to the nation-wide Hudson reputation for courtesy and square-dealing in every transaction."

"POACHING ON PRESERVES"

CROYDON, Sept. 20.—When a quart jar of apple butter was found missing from their home Sunday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilkinson were able to find traces of some of the spilled sweet leading from their home yesterday morning. This is the third time recently that the larder at the Wilkinson home has been "poached" upon. On two recent Sunday evenings upon returning from church services, Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson discovered that the refrigerator was empty, every container, together with food, being taken. Entrance was gained by forcing of a window.

TO ATTEND FUNERAL

Members of American Legion Auxiliary, Robert W. Bracken Posts, will meet at Bath and Buckley streets, tomorrow at nine a. m., to attend the funeral of Mrs. Ellen Rafferty in a body.

195TH ANNIVERSARY OF INDIAN WALK OF BUCKS COUNTY IS MARKED THIS WEEK; A HISTORICALLY IMPORTANT AND "MORALLY DISHONEST" EVENT

Writer in Trenton Sunday Times-Advertiser Recounts How Lenni Lenape Indians Were Defrauded of Hundreds of Thousands of Most Fertile Acres

Writing in the Trenton Sunday Advertiser, Elma Lawson Johnson under the caption "Land Fraud Anniversary Tomorrow" has the following to say: Tomorrow marks the 195th anniversary of the Indian Walk of Bucks County, one of those historically important and morally dishonest events which from time to time occur in both American and European history. As a result of this one, the Lenni Lenape Indians owning and occupying most of what was then Bucks County, were defrauded of hundreds of thousands of their most fertile acres to satisfy the greed of the white man.

Ironically enough the person who engineered this deal was none other than Thomas Penn, son of William Penn, the great Pennsylvania Proprietor, who in all his dealings with the Indians had been scrupulously fair and honest and so had gained their regard and esteem and saved his colonists from the all too frequent Indian outrages. By the famous Walking Purchase of 1737, and the treaty it consummated, the younger Penn threw away that Indian regard which could so easily have been his and unleashed in its place Indian vengeance, which manifested itself for long years afterward in massacres and wars.

The Walking Purchase, or Indian Walk, as it is sometimes called, was no new thing. It was not uncommon for the white man to buy land from the Indians, the amount of territory to be transferred being determined by the distance a man could walk within a given time. True enough the Indian was paid usually in trinkets representing nowhere near the actual value of the thing he sold, but it was what he wanted and asked for, the amount of land sold was honestly arrived at and the whole deal was ethical and legal.

As early as 1682 one finds William Markham, agent and kinsman of William Penn buying land from the Indians, in compliance with the policy to which the famous Friend had adhered ever since he had received vast grants of land in the New World—to make an actual purchase of the land from its rightful owners and so quench once and for all their legitimate claim to it.

How careful Penn was in this respect and how desirous he was of dealing fairly with the Indians is evidenced in a letter of his to James Harrison a colonist, in which he says: "Be tender of offending the Indians and hearken, by honest spies, if you can hear that anybody inveigles the Indians not to sell, or to stand off and raise the value upon you. . . . Let my letter and conditions with my purchasers about just dealing with them, be read in their tongue, that they may see we have their good in our eye."

By a purchase negotiated in 1682 by Markham, Penn bought from the Indians all the territory between the Neshaminy and the Delaware as far as Wrightstown and Upper Makefield. In 1683, a few months after Penn himself arrived in this country, he bought additional lands, lying between the Neshaminy and Peapack Creeks.

In general the amount of land sold was determined by the distance a man could travel in a given time and as far as is known Penn never took advantage of the red men, nor were they dissatisfied.

It is said that these purchases were followed in 1686 by a treaty made (Continued on Page 4)

Starts Long Trek

Despite her 67 years, Mrs. Rose Ryan, a great-grandmother of Allentown, Pa., is still more red-blooded than many half her age. Mrs. Ryan, widow of a Civil War veteran, is shown as she left Jamaica, L. I., to hitch-hike to Los Angeles. She will sell flowers along the way to raise funds for needy veterans of the war in which her husband served. It is her ambition to open her home in Allentown as a home for war veterans.

LANGHORNE SCHOOL DISTRICT ENJOINED

Restrained by Court from Adding to Its Indebtedness

VOTERS MUST CONSENT

At the opening of the September term of criminal court at Doylestown yesterday, before the calling of jurors for trials, Judge Calvin S. Boyer handed down an opinion and decree in the case of Ira L. Kinney, a taxpayer of Langhorne, against the school district of Langhorne.

The defendants included Joseph G. Davenport, Frank A. Mitchell, Howard Vansant, Carl F. Cortz, Sr., and Mabel B. Varian, school directors of Langhorne, and the school district of Middletown township, including the directors, Hannah Pickering, Harriet W. Tomb, Walter S. Miller, Samuel Everett and Franklin Briggs.

Judge Boyer adjudged and decreed as follows:

"First, that the defendants be enjoined and restrained from executing an agreement altering and amending the existing agreement under which the joint consolidated school is operated by the joint boards of the school districts of Langhorne and Middletown township as authorized and proposed by the said joint and several resolutions of the school boards of said districts, adopted on May 19, 1932.

"Second, that the excess of capital outlay made by the school district of Langhorne over that of the school district of Middletown township is to be regarded as indebtedness of the said school district of Middletown township, and any and all further proposed payments of contribution by said school district of Langhorne toward said capital outlay, is hereby enjoined and restrained insofar as the same would increase the indebtedness of Middletown township to an amount in excess of two per centum of its assessed value, until the consent of the electors of said school district of Middletown township is regularly obtained to such increase.

"That the defendants pay the costs of these proceedings."

The matter came up in the Court of Common Pleas upon preliminary objections to the bill in equity in lieu of demurrer under the equity rules, and the suit was brought by a resident taxpayer of Langhorne against the school district of Langhorne and Middletown township and the board of directors of both districts, to restrain the defendants from amending an agreement under which they operate a joint consolidated school, providing that the school district of Langhorne should contribute an additional sum of money for the enlarging of the school building and to enjoin them from expending money under such amended agreement.

GANDHI BEGINS FAST

Bombay, India, Sept. 20.—Despite the pleas of his friends, Mahatma Gandhi, Hindu saint, today began his fast by which he hopes to starve to death. Gandhi remained at the Yerayda jail as the fast started, but British Government officials said he was free to receive visitors or leave the prison whenever he wished. His decision to die, so that the world might take notice of India's plight, was unshaken, despite the pleas of his friends to refrain from doing anything which might do more harm to India. The Mahatma has refused to leave his cell or to accept the British government's offer of conditional relief. In response to this offer he replied only by force could they remove him.

Mrs. Arabel V. Ackerson Dies in Her 75th Year

Mrs. Arabel V. Ackerson, widow of W. Henry Ackerson, died at her home, 578 Swain street, late last night, after an illness of several months. She was in her 75th year.

The deceased is survived by one son, Edward H., who lived with his mother at the Bristol address, and one daughter, Mrs. Benjamin B. Praul, of Emmie; six grand children and four great grandchildren.

For the past 60 years the deceased had made her home here, coming to Bristol from Manch Chunk.

Funeral services will be held Friday, at her late residence, at two p. m., with the Rev. S. Brooks Knowlton officiating. Interment will be made in Bristol Cemetery under direction of the H. S. Rue Estate, undertakers.

MEILBOURNE, Australia.—The Royal Research Ship, Discovery II, operating under the direction of the Falkland Islands government and carrying a crew which includes five British scientists, has sailed into the Antarctic to estimate the whale population of this region. The scientists will gather other data to serve as the basis for an international agreement to prevent over-fishing and depletion of the whale herds.

THOUGHT MOON WAS A FIRE

(By "The Stroller")

"Uncle Jess, there must be an awful big fire," was the exclamation of a Hulmeville miss as she returned home a few evenings ago. At the excited invitation the uncle emerged from the house and glanced in the direction indicated. Yes, it was a fire, and a big one at that.

The two stepped into the trusty Ford, and were off down Main street. They proceeded a quarter mile, then turned back (in disgust and relief) as a bright orange moon was seen peeping over yonder hill.

"FIRE-BUG" NOW IN ARMS OF LAW; MICHAEL FARRELL, 30, PHILADELPHIA, CONFESSES STARTING MANY FIRES HERE

Pyromaniac "Picked Up" As He Gazes Into Window of Mill Street Jewelry Store — "I Don't Know Why I Did It," Confession Reads

Bristol's alleged fire-bug was grabbed last night as he gazed into the window of a Mill street jewelry store which it is presumed he was planning to touch off sometime later during the evening.

The man under arrest and who has confessed, gives the name of Michael Farrell, 30. He has no permanent home, according to his own statement, but he claims to be a native of Philadelphia. "I lived at Eddington until 1918," he says. No one in this section knows him.

Farrell was picked up by Officer Ferry at about 7.45, as he stood in front of Wetling's jewelry store. He was taken to the Municipal Building and questioned closely by Chief Jones and Chief McGee. Several firemen who had noticed Farrell about town for the past week were summoned and identified him as the man they suspected.

Farrell, after considerable questioning, finally "broke," told the police his story; went over the ground with them and gave a demonstration of the manner in which he had fired the several properties and then returned to police headquarters and wrote out his own confession.

"Why did you do it?" was asked of Farrell.

"I liked to see the fire go up in the air," was his reply.

Farrell, at times, appears to be of unbalanced mind, but then again he will talk as if his reasoning was sound and his mind good. Police think he is feigning. He is decidedly unkempt and his clothes are considerably worn. His hair is long and he constantly runs his fingers through it as he mumbles his answers to questions asked.

Farrell when searched did not have a single possession in his clothing with the exception of an empty safety match box and a folder of matches with the same colored sticks as the matches found about the properties where fires had been discovered.

Farrell was first seen about Bristol last Wednesday when he was noticed half concealing himself in an out-of-the-way place near a garage on Otter street. Friday he was again seen standing at Bath and Otter streets. Sunday he was noticed walking from South Langhorne in the direction of Bristol.

The pyromaniac is charged with setting fire to five automobiles, four buildings and a freight car.

In his verbal confession to the police Farrell related the places he ignited, told of the manner in which he had started the fires and gave other details. When it came to writing his confession he did it in a crude manner and omitted many of the details previously given.

According to his own story, after firing the buildings, he went to Croydon Sunday night and slept in the P. R. R. (Continued on Page 2)

MRS. RANDALL INSTALLED AUXILIARY PRESIDENT

Langhorne Officers Obligated by Mrs. Betty Wipf, a
9th Dist. Officer

COMMITTEES NAMED

LANGHORNE, Sept. 20.—Officers of American Legion Auxiliary, Jesse W. Soby Post, were installed at the Memorial House, here, last evening, by Mrs. Betty Wipf, an officer of the Ninth District Auxiliaries. During the installation ceremonies Mrs. Wipf presented the gavel to Mrs. Warren Randall, recently elected president who succeeds Mrs. Roscoe L. Horner.

After assuming her new position Mrs. Randall appointed the following committees: Welfare—Mrs. Gilbert Bonnell, Langhorne; Mrs. Harry Berg-bauer, South Langhorne; Miss Elma E. Haefer, Hulmeville; Mrs. W. Elmer Watson, Parkland; Flowers—Miss Mary Keating, South Langhorne; Mrs. Betty Robinson, Langhorne; Mrs. Harry Gill, Hulmeville; Mrs. Watson, Parkland. On the Memorial House management committee, Mrs. Thomas B. Longhurst will represent the Auxiliary.

Nineteen attended the session. Mrs. Bonnell reported business transacted at the recent Bi-County Council meeting at Norristown. Langhorne will be host to the Council in October, luncheon being served by members of Girls' Friendly of Grace P. E. Church, Hulmeville. Mrs. Wipf gave a brief resume of activities at the state convention of the Legion and Auxiliary.

It was reported by Miss Rita Keating, chairman of play committee, that the play "Adam's Apple" will be staged within a few weeks, and that rehearsals are progressing. Refreshments were served.

HARVEST FESTIVAL TO BE STAGED AT TURNERS

Seventh Annual Event to Be Held at Country Club
in Eddington

MANY PRIZES OFFERED

EDDINGTON, Sept. 20.—The seventh annual Harvest Festival and Tri-County Agricultural Fair for Bucks, Montgomery, and Philadelphia Counties, will be held at the Turner Country Club, State Road, and Neshaminy Creek, here, Saturday and Sunday, September 24th and 25th.

Growers of vegetable and fruit products in the three counties named will enter exhibits, and present indications are that the number of exhibits will be larger than ever before.

A program of interesting sports, consisting of a baseball game between Croydon and the Turners of Philadelphia, along with a track and field meet by the public schools of Bucks County, are some of the features planned.

The Honorable W. S. Hagar, deputy state secretary of agriculture, will visit the fair and address the exhibitors and visitors on a subject of interest and importance to all food growers.

In addition to the exhibits of vegetables and fruits there will also be a class for exhibits in home economics. Cash prizes and ribbons will be awarded.

Mrs. Anthony Pfaffenrath, Fillmore street, and Mrs. Frank Pfaffenrath, Fairview Lane, were Thursday visitors of friends in Philadelphia.

COMIC OPERA HOSTILITIES

Great Britain and Spain once went to war over a man's ear. Paraguay and Bolivia have not even as good an excuse for going to war. Though they claim it is feeling over a boundary dispute it is plainly and simply a feeling for war.

When Captain Jenkins' ear led to hostilities between England and Spain 193 years ago there was no other way to end international disputes except upon the field of battle. Today that is one place where they never are settled permanently.

Both nations are itching for a fight. They don't want peace and seem to be tickled to death that an absurd boundary dispute gives them something to shoot and shout about. With chips on their shoulders and both eager to knock the other's off they are well matched.

Several nations have offered to mediate the controversy that the question may be settled peacefully and fairly, but the disputants will have none of it and resent this outside interference.

Perhaps Paraguay and Bolivia are not aware of it but they are acting like two belligerent school boys in the eyes of the rest of the world. They both need to be given a good spanking and sent to bed without supper.

If it were not for the petty squabbling of the little nations, this would be a peaceful world most of the time.

TIME

The idea of time which turns conveniently backward in its flight to aid the intellectual adventures of physicists, or rather of time with neither a forward nor a backward to provide distinction for a turning, as expressed by a scientist, will seem to common-sense people little more than wordy nonsense.

It is worth remembering, however, that many fundamentals of science are but wordy nonsense, when viewed from the strictly limited outlook of common sense, an outlook which cannot transcend experience of the human senses. It is no verbal accident, but a deep and important philosophical truth that the more usual kinds of reasoning are called "sense" and the means by which this reasoning is attained are called "senses."

The senses permit no fusion or confusion, for example, between the ideas of up and down. Yet it needs but little knowledge of the cosmos to convince that no such thing exists.

Even to strictly common-sense physiologists it becomes increasingly evident that the human body has many senses beyond the traditional five; some of them especially important precisely because their operations are so largely unconscious.

One of these is the still mysterious time sense. Where it resides no one knows. What bodily mechanism keeps clock on it is equally a mystery. Yet there can be no doubt that in some way the human machine keeps track of something that we call the passage of time.

What the scientists are trying to find out is whether that machine perceives the passage of time wrongly as it perceives the cosmic fact of gravity wrongly. Perhaps there is neither past nor future, they say.

Gov't. Attempts To Prove Davis Profited

of the Senator. He said another check for $15,300 was deposited to the personal checking account of Davis.

The favorable picture of Senator Davis' part in promoting the balls for the Loyal Order of Moose, of which he is director general, was painted by his chief counsel, Charles H. Tuttle, a former United States attorney.

"Senator Davis is not charged with stealing any money," he said. "Nor with any mail fraud case. In the last analysis he is charged with having in some way put through a project by measures the district attorney chooses to call lottery tickets."

"In the first place, we deny the plan of the charity ball was a lottery. We deny there was anything illegal about it. We deny Davis participated in it. And in the fourth place we deny he got a penny out of it."

Both attorneys described a trip off the coast of Connecticut in the Priscilla, on which "lucky stubs" were drawn to determine who would win large sums of cash, which Treadwell called "prizes" and Tuttle insisted were only "awards."

"They are trying to make out that trip on New Year's Day down the bay to the 12-mile limit was for the purpose of a secret drawing," said Tuttle. "It was a group of distinguished citizens on board that day, including officials of the Knights of Columbus and the Shrine. I tell you the trip to the 12-mile limit—on New Year's Day—was not for a secret drawing, but for a very different purpose."

Tuttle went on to laud the extent and organization of the Loyal Order of Moose and the fraternal orphanage conducted at Mooseheart. He told of Davis' own career, beginning as an immigrant boy from Wales and of how he worked up from a messenger boy and steel mill "puddler" to become Secretary of Labor and United States Senator.

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY

Deaths	1
ACKERSON—At Bristol, Pa., September 19, 1932, Arabelle V., wife of the late W. Henry Ackerson, in her 75th year. Relatives and friends are invited to the funeral services from her late residence, 578 Swain street, Friday, September 23, 1932, at 2 p. m. Interment in Bristol Cemetery. Friends may call Thursday evening.

He answered the charge about the $100,000 note paid from profits of the alleged lottery by stating it was properly a liability of the Moose in connection with the organization.

The trial moved along promptly. A jury of 12, with two alternates was chosen before the noon recess.

STATE NEWS

STATE COLLEGE.—Pennsylvania led all the states in farm forest tree planting last year, with 6,028,835 trees set out, a report received at the Pennsylvania State College from the forest service of the United States Department of Agriculture shows.

In total trees distributed for planting on all classes of land except national forests the Keystone state ranked third with more than 8,000,000 trees planted. New York was first and Michigan, second.

WILKES-BARRE.—Two youths escaped from the Kis-Lyn Industrial School but they didn't get very far. Their attire was against them. Wearing nightgowns and with neckties girdles the boys were picked up by police here and were returned to the institution.

station there. He gives the address of a sister living in Philadelphia.

His confession reads:

Bristol, Pa.,
Sept. 19, Monday, 1932.
I burned down the shed at Mill street and the garage and the truck Thursday night and last night at five o'clock this morning.

After I set them on fire the shed and garage I went up to Langhorne Sunday night and came back by the Nesheim road to Croydon, then up here to Bristol.

I don't know why I did it.
(Signed) MICHAEL FARRELL.
Sworn and subscribed before me this 19th day of September, 1932.

EDWARD LYNN, Justice of Peace. The witnesses to the confession were Linford J. Jones, James L. McGee, Thomas Crawford, Daniel Ferry. Farrell intelligently discusses his place of birth, his family and his occupation. He says he is the son of the late Michael and Ellen Farrell and was born in South Philadelphia in 1902. He is unable to recall the name of the street. He told the police he was one of three sons and two daughters, only one of whom is living. Mrs. Marie Welsh, 6010 Larchwood avenue, Philadelphia.

Farrell states that he has been out of employment for the past two years when he was laid off as a painter by a man named Siegel, 6th and Cherry streets, Philadelphia.

For the past two years Farrell has roamed the country, according to his own statement and came into Bristol Wednesday of last week from Burlington, N. J. He says that he walked across the Burlington-Bristol bridge but had no money with which to pay toll.

In going to the places where fires have occurred since the fire-bug scare, Farrell showed the police and Chief McGee where he had started the various blazes. At the Wetherill lumber yards he indicated the spot but turning to the police and Chief McGee, he said: "I haven't any paper." In an unguarded moment he attempted to elude the officers at the Wetherill property. He suddenly turned and attempted a dash for liberty but was quickly stopped.

Farrell weighs 130 pounds, according to his own statement, and is five feet, five inches tall. He is wearing a pair of tan colored shoes which he claims was given him in a Bristol barber shop.

Farrell was again taken over the ground of his alleged incendiary actions today and asked to give more in detail as to the manner in which he started the various blazes.

At a hearing at the municipal building this morning, before Justice of the Peace Edward Lynn, Farrell was held without bail for court. He will be taken to Doylestown jail tomorrow morning.

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

DAPHNE HAINES, seventeen and lovely, is literally driven from home by her nagging stepmother, whose sole interest is in her own daughter, Crystal. The second Mrs. Haines is determined that Crystal shall marry Ralph McKevitt, a handsome young man of wealth. Ralph, one day admires Daphne, whom he sees at a distance, and Mrs. Haines decides to permanently eliminate the younger girl, whose rivalry she secretly fears. She provokes a sordid quarrel in the household, and Daphne, realizing the helplessness of her position, leaves home to make her way in San Francisco. The quest for employment is difficult. She is almost starving when she encounters Ralph McKevitt, her stepister's "prize" young man, in a cheap restaurant. He buys her a hearty meal and takes her home in his car.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER 13.

DAPHNE'S hand shook a little as she hung up the receiver. She didn't know what to make of Ralph McKevitt. She had been so happy, so proud of finding a job all herself.

"Oh that won't do at all!" he had said disgustedly.

A little flame of rebellion flared up in her suddenly. He hadn't any right to talk to her like that. It wasn't any of his business what kind of position she took. Except for the fact that she owed him ten dollars, and he was the only friend she had in the world, and she loved him.

"I can't help it if it is silly—I do love him. I always have, ever since the first time I saw him," she thought miserably, and blew her nose. "Darn it, why did he have to act so queer and spoil everything?"

The gaslight in the hall flickered faintly, a dim, red eye, but light streamed from the kitchen where old Mrs. Hinkle stood in the doorway wiping garbled hands on a dingy apron. "You got bad news, Miss Haines?"

"No—nothing—"

But the tears came before she could get back to her room again and close the door. The bottom had dropped out of her brand new world. Everything was spoiled.

"Nobody's going to talk to me like that!" she whispered fiercely, hugging her knees, trying to harden her heart against him.

But when she heard his ring and he stood in Mrs. Hinkle's doorway, ruddy, broad-shouldered, smiling, she melted. Forgot everything but that he was there. Come to see her—the wonderful Ralph McKevitt!

"I'll get my hat!" she cried breathlessly, her heart bursting, her knees weak as water. When she came back with last Summer's straw hat on her head and Winter-before-last's blue coat on her back, and knew that Mrs. Hinkle was slyly peering from the kitchen, and Flora McCordle boldly staring from the stairway, she nearly burst with pride.

"Isn't it a wonderful night? Isn't it wonderful!"

He looked up and down the commonplace street, and back to Daphne, who had stars in her eyes and roses in her cheeks, and laughed. "You're a wonderful girl!"

"Am I?" And she laughed too, out of sheer happiness.

They drove through the park where the shrubs were spicy and sweet and the tall trees black and sinister against a faintly moonlit sky.

And then she could smell the salt wind and hear the pounding of the surf, and they were on a road near the sea, all alone . . . Ralph and she.

She felt his arm behind her, drawing her to him. "I shouldn't let him," she thought, remembering the warnings of the prim little schoolteacher she had been so fond of, and the veiled hints of her stepmother about what happened to girls who were "too easy."

She sighed, and let her head rest against his shoulder. She didn't want to think, she just wanted to be near him . . . always.

He began to talk. "Look here, you don't want to work in a big office, all full of gum-chewing stenographers, do you?"

"N-no, but you can't pick out the kind you want. Why, I've been weeks and weeks just getting any kind. Why, I thought—"

"Wouldn't you rather work somewhere in a nice office where you'd have a chance to show what you could do, and get more money for less work?"

"Yes, but—"

"And move out of that mausoleum where you're living into a decent sort of place—wouldn't you?"

"Of course!"

"Well then, you quit that job you have and leave everything to me. I'll fix things—"

"But it might take a long time. Couldn't I just keep it until—"

"Hold on—who's running this? Didn't I tell you I'd manage this?"

"But I didn't know you meant—"

"I meant I'd take care of you. Didn't I tell you that?"

She blinked up at him, her small white face radiant with wonder and love. He leaned toward her, laughing, and she closed her eyes and let him kiss her.

"He's mine now—all mine!" she thought, and triumph and pain shot through her, and overwhelming happiness.

After a while he drove on again, and they went into a warm, bright roadhouse where there was a great fireplace and people dining and dancing. She ate something and drank something, she hardly knew what. Ginger ale with something added out of a flat silver flask Ralph had in a back pocket.

"Good stuff," he said, "it won't hurt you."

It was a golden night, a night of dreams. Unreal. Like something out of the Arabian Nights.

He glanced at the watch on his wrist. "Half past eleven, and I've got to be at the office at seven tomorrow—or I should be—there's a big bond issue breaking. You didn't know I was a bond salesman now, did you?"

"No," she said smiling. He might have said ditch-digger, or President of the United States, it wouldn't have mattered. He was Ralph—that was enough.

"Well, it's a little better than that. I have my own business, stocks and bonds."

"That's wonderful!" she breathed back. "You're a fraud," he laughed. "You don't know the difference between a bond office and a peanut stand. Come on, we've got to be moving, it's getting late."

The house was very quiet when Daphne tiptoed into the hall, but there was a light in Miss Viola's parlor, where she sat yawning over a dress she was finishing.

Miss Viola pushed the green velvet curtains aside and poked a disheveled grayish head into the hall. "Is that you, Miss Haines? Come in for a minute. I'm that sleepy if I don't talk to some one . . . pardon me, I just can't help yawning. . . . I wish I hadn't promised this dress. I'm too easy going for my own good."

Mrs. Daseburg wanted to wear it to the Native Daughters tomorrow; it'll look good on her; she's got a good figure if she is fleshy—"

Her pudgy hands stitched on while she talked.

Daphne hovered in the doorway, trying to come back to earth.

"I had a wonderful time!" she said finally.

"Oh, were you out somewhere?" And then, scenting romance: "With your young man?"

"Yes, with someone—I knew at home—"

She was still floundering, embarrassed by Miss Viola's curious little eyes, when she felt a hand behind her waist, and there was Flora McCordle, cigarette in hand, hat on the back of her head, a great bunch of roses and lilies of the valley dying on her shoulder.

"So you've been stepping, too? I saw you go out. Who is he?"

Daphne blushed. "The one I was telling you about this morning—"

"Yes, I know—but what's his name—I've seen him somewhere."

"McKevitt—Ralph McKevitt. He was the greatest fullback Stanford ever had. He played on—"

"Ralph Iverson McKevitt, stocks and bonds—in the Gas Building on California Street!" Flora whistled. "You're the lucky one to pick that up. He's plastered with money—"

"Pickup . . . that word again . . . I told you I knew him at home!"

Daphne cried hotly.

Flora laughed indulgently. "Sure you did. I forgot. What's he going to do—get you a job?"

"I got myself a job today, but he . . . he doesn't want me to keep it," she added, remembering uncomfortably that he had been insistent about it. She had forgotten everything but the kiss.

"Planning to look out for your yourself, is that it?"

It was so nearly what Ralph had said, that Daphne stared at her in astonishment. "Why—"

Flora chuckled. "I know—I got a look at him. I haven't lived twenty-seven years for nothing. Well, it's up to you kid. Do as you like. . . . G'night . . . Lord, I'm sleepy!"

She vanished up the dark stairway, but something lingered behind her. The sharp, sweetish smell of gin, the scent of dying flowers. Miss Viola was staring at Daphne, a queer look in her small, near-sighted eyes.

"Good night," Daphne said quickly, and went to her room. She hated them both.

ANNOUNCING

ENTERPRISE GARAGE

Wood and Washington Sts.

ESSEX TERRAPLANE

AND THE COMPLETE LINE OF HUDSON AND ESSEX

PACEMAKERS

We honestly believe the new ESSEX TERRAPLANE to be the most sensational motor car ever built. It is emphatically not "just another low-priced car," but a new-type automobile.

To a public fed up with small-car bobbling and big-car expense it offers the first combination of light-car nimbleness and thrift and heavy-car stability and comfort ever achieved in a motor car.

It is power set free—a thrilling new physical sensation—a smooth, skimming, dashing motion comparable only to planing in the air or on the water.

The lowest-priced Six in America—selling down among and under the former lowest-priced three—it outperforms the costliest cars in impartial scientific tests!

Because we believe large numbers of people have been awaiting just such a "post-depression" car—because we believe the 1932 Hudson and Essex Pacemakers to be outstanding values in the low-to-medium price fields—we are happy to announce our appointment as Hudson and Essex dealer for Bristol and vicinity.

We invite you to visit our showrooms at

CORNWELLS A. A. LOSES TO MARSHAL SMITH NINE

(By H. States)

Cornwells A. A. was defeated by the strong Marshal E. Smith Pros on the home field by the score of 6-3. Both teams did plenty of hitting but a total of 19 men were left on bases.

F. Bowman and Davis, each managed to garner three singles for the home team while Butch, Peake and Zimba were the big guns for the visitors. Each gathered 2 singles and a double.

This was Cornwells' eighth defeat of the season in 38 starts.

a suspended sentence and placed on parole on condition that she obtain a position as a practical nurse that has been offered to her in a private hospital in Trenton.

Schaffer was put on parole from the "pen" when the last thefts for which he was arrested, were committed. He served 17 months some years ago in the Bucks County Prison for stealing chickens and at that time was granted a parole by the late Judge William C. Ryan.

Harry Parker, of Carversville, was convicted yesterday of forgery and uttering a forgery. The jury was of the opinion that Parker is mentally unbalanced and should have a commission in lunacy appointed to examine him. Parker forged a number of checks on Bucks county merchants.

HIGH SCHOOL ELEVEN OUT FOR SCRIMMAGE

After two weeks of hard practice, the Bristol high eleven had its first scrimmage Saturday. The squad was divided into two clubs; one Cardinal and the other Gray. This scrimmage was in the form of a regular game. The Cardinal team won by the score of 6-0.

Taking everything into consideration the teams did fairly well. Their tackling and ball running was good, but they need to improve their blocking.

Coach Dougherty has all boys' gym classes working on this same Cardinal and Gray color system.

Judge Keller Gives Decisions in Divorces

President Judge Hiram H. Keller at Doylestown handed down two divorces upon payment of costs: Ethel Y. Worthington, of Langhorne, against S. ## Sermon by Bishop Taitt To Feature Anniversary

St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church is to observe its 220th anniversary next Sunday morning, when the Rev. Francis M. Taitt, D. D., bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, will occupy the pulpit and deliver a sermon. This anniversary service will occur at 10:45 o'clock.

At the service a memorial to the late Pearson Spring, in the form of silver offering plates, will be dedicated. These are gifts of Mrs. Louis C. Spring and Miss Gertrude Spring, mother and sister of the deceased.

Bishop Taitt will be dinner guest of the rector, Rev. George E. Boswell, and Mrs. Boswell at the rectory Sunday.

195th Anniversary of Indian Walk is Marked This Week

August 30, in which the Indians conveyed to William Penn all the land that lies above the upper line of the treaty of 1682, between the Neshaminy and the Delaware and extending inland "as far as a man can go in a day and a half." Curiously that particular treaty, which is of such historical importance, has never been found, and some historians are convinced that it never existed. Others assert that one was made, but they incline to the Indians' contention that later it was altered.

Whether or not there was a treaty, colonists shortly afterward began to settle in the region in large numbers, some pushing as far as the Lehigh. It is likely that gradually the white settlers penetrated into lands that had never been sold by the Indians, and eventually the red men became alarmed and indignant at the encroachment of the English.

So concerned did the Indians become finally that in 1733 or 1734 they insisted the boundaries of the district conveyed by the supposed treaty of 1686 be definitely determined. For this purpose a series of meetings were held between the Indians and the Pennsylvania Proprietors. William Penn had been dead about 15 years, the population of his province had grown greatly and the border was settled by men who held both Penn's principles and the Indians' rights in light regard. The Proprietors who succeeded Penn in management of the colony lacked the elder man's integrity, and evil days were ahead for both the settlers and the Indians.

In compliance with the request of the Lenni Lenape, meetings were held to fix the boundaries of the land involved in the 1686 treaty. The first was held at the Durham Iron Works in 1734, a second was at Pennsbury in 1735 and the third was in Philadelphia in 1737. At that last meeting the Indians were confused and asked for an adjournment until afternoon, which was granted them. The Indians asserted that they did not understand how lines mentioned in the deed were to be run and a plan was made and shown them.

William J. Buck in his "History of the Indian Walk" contends that the map was gotten up to deceive, and that in it the Delaware and the fork of the Neshaminy were misplaced as was the line of the proposed walk. The Indians, not comprehending the inaccuracies, agreed to the map and confirmed the sale. Another historian, J. H. Battle, in his "History of Bucks County," also holds to this belief, and asserts that there is abundant evidence of sharp practice on the part of Thomas Penn. He contends that the insistence on the walking purchase was indefensible in view of previous treaties, that the draft shown the Indians was meant to deceive them and to permit the Penns to seize lands in the forks of the Delaware. He adds that the plot was probably thought of as early as 1734 and steadily pursued to the end.

In the year 1734 the Indians were uneasy and inclined to be resentful of the ever-increasing settlements of the white man, and it is thought by some historians that it would have been a difficult matter to pacify them and settle the land problem equitably, while others feel that a liberal payment would have achieved a happy ending of the impasse. But Thomas Penn, it seems, was quite penurious and opposed to paying for what he could obtain by sharp practice.

After the conference of 1735, the plan of Thomas Penn to outwit the Indians becomes apparent, for with his associates he arranged for a preliminary walk to be made, to determine how far it would be possible for the walkers to go by careful planning and how advantage could be taken of their journey.

Timothy Smith, sheriff of Bucks County, John Chapman, deputy surveyor of the county, and James Steel, the Proprietors' receiver of rents, were to conduct the trial walk. The first two apparently did not act quickly enough to suit the Proprietors, and in a letter of April, 1735, Steel informed Smith that the Proprietors were impatient to know what progress had been made "in traveling over the land that is to be settled in the ensuing treaty that is to be held with the Indians at Pennsbury, on the fifth of next month." Four days later he wrote again, saying:

"The Proprietors are very much concerned that so much time hath been lost before you begin the work recommended so earnestly at your leaving Philadelphia and it being so very short before the meeting at Pennsbury, the 5th of next month, that they now desire that upon the return of Joseph Doane, he, together with two other persons who can travel well, should be immediately sent on foot on the day and a half journey, and two others on horseback to carry necessary provisions for them, and to assist them in their return home." His letter concluded with the remark that those who took part in the walk would be "generously rewarded."

This was needless alarm on Steel's part, for the preliminary walk began April 22, 1735. It lasted nine days, and several persons went along beside the walkers.

As the party advanced on the walk, the trail was blazed so that the route might be more easily followed on the official trip, when several Indians were to accompany the white men. This trial walk was taking place while Penn and his associates were holding conferences with the Indians to negotiate the treaty. Once the Indians agreed to it, August 25, 1737, plans were set in motion for the official walk, and again a letter of Steel reveals what took place. To Smith he wrote:

"The treaty with the Indians which was begun at Durham and afterward held at Pennsbury, is now finished at Philadelphia and the time is appointed for walking over the land. It is to be the 12th of September, and for that purpose our Proprietor would request thee to speak to that man of the three which traveled and held out the best when they walked over the land before, to attend to that service at the time mentioned, when Solomon Jennings is expected to join and travel the day and a half with him."

Once again it was arranged that men on horseback should accompany the walkers to carry food and other necessities.

Edwin Marshall, James Yeates and Solomon Jennings were the famous walkers chosen for this eventful journey. Marshall, it is said, "put himself in keeping according to his best judgment, fully determined to win the prize of 500 acres of land or lose his life in the attempt." The reward was five pounds in money and five hundred acres of land.

Although September 12 was the day originally determined upon for the walk, the Supreme and the Quarter Sessions Court of Bucks County were both sitting, and it was deemed advisable to postpone the journey until September 19. There is a tradition that many spectators beside the officials conducting the walk assembled for the start which began at a chestnut tree "near the turning of the road from Durham to John Chapman's." This stoop in what is now a corner of a field adjoining the property of the Wrightstown Meeting House and it was a well-known landmark.

In the assemblage there were the white walkers, three Indians representing the tribes of the Lenni Lenape involved in the purchase; Timothy Smith, Benjamin Eastburn, Nicholas Seull and John Chapman, a nephew of James Steel, Joseph Smith, a nephew of the sheriff and many spectators as well as men who were to travel on horseback carrying the "provisions, liquor and bedding."

The sun as it arose that memorable morning found Marshall, Yeates and Jennings standing with their hands on the chestnut tree, awaiting the signal to start. At last Sheriff Smith announced the time of departure had arrived, and the three men, the Indians and the attendants, with compass to guide them, started off. Some of the spectators who were not merely idly curious, since the outcome of the walk meant something to them, managed to convert the affair into a mild sporting event by betting on the speed of the walkers.

It is recorded that Yeates led the way, walking off with a light step that promised to carry him far. Some distance behind came Jennings, accompanied by two Indian walkers. Well in the rear was Marshall, walking with an indifferent air and swinging a hatchet in his hand. Jennings was the first to fall out, before noon, at Red Mill, now Ottsville, less than 20 miles from the start. At noon the party paused for refreshment, taking, it is alleged, only 15 minutes for their noon-day meal.

In that first day's journey, it was plain to the Indian walkers that the white men were to defraud them, and in disgust they left the party and could not be induced to go on. They insisted that the walk should have extended up the river and there is a tradition that some of the settlers agreed with them.

However, on the morning of the second day, bleak and rainy, the walkers set out anew. Yeates is accused of having drunk too much liquor, so that when crossing Big Creek (but probably the Lehigh River), he fell in the stream and could not continue the walk.

That left Marshall going on alone, and at noon of the second day, having reached the north side of the Pocono

Mountains, he is reported to have thrown himself upon the ground, exhausted. He had traveled about 66 or 68 miles, a remarkable distance over rough mountainous country. The Indians were rightly disgusted at the performance, for as Dr. B. F. Packenthal, Jr., an authority on the walk, has said:

"What must have been their chagrin when they discovered that the northern boundary, or head-line, was not to be direct to the Delaware River, but to a point about where Stroudsburg now stands, but was to be run at a right angle, ending at Parker's Glen, about five miles below the mouth of the Lackawaxen River, near Shoholo Creek, and thus taking in an additional 750,000 acres of land, and with it their fertile lands in the Minisinks and their favorite hunting grounds in the Poconos. That territory is today a favorite hunting ground for American sportsmen, and moreover is one of the most popular playgrounds for summer vacationists. It took the surveyor general four days to run out the line from the end of the walk to the Delaware River, a distance of about sixty miles."

The Indians really had legitimate grounds for complaint, but may have been unable to express their resentment adequately in language. They asserted that the white men went too fast, ran in fact, and that they walked too steadily, whereas they should have stopped to shoot game, smoke or eat.

There is a bit of poetic justice in the fact that Marshall, who successfully completed the task assigned him, was never paid. Furthermore, upon him the Indians wrought their vengeance. He was a native of Bustleton, Bucks County, but at the time of the walk he had moved to Tinicum Township. Afterward he moved into Mount Bethel Township, Northampton County, making his home on Jacobus Creek. There is ample warrant for the assertion of Dr. Packenthal that Marshall was an object of special hatred on the part of the Indians.

"During the latter part of 1755," Dr. Packenthal reports, "he fled with his family to New Jersey, where they remained until the Spring of 1757, when they moved back to their Northampton County home. During the latter part of May of that year, when he was on the mountain chopping wood, a band of sixteen Indians attacked his home, killing his wife (nee Elizabeth Oberfelt or Overfield), who was about to become a mother, and his eldest daughter, Catherine, aged about fourteen years. His eldest son, Peter, was killed later by a second attack of the Indians. During the same year, 1757, his brother William bequeathed to him an unpatented island, containing 116 acres, 19 perches, in the Delaware River opposite the mouth of Tinicum Creek, in Bucks County, then known as Tinicum Island. There he lived over the remainder of his life with his second wife, having, in 1758, married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Weiser, of Northampton County, then 30 years of age, whose father had been scalped by the Indians in 1755.

"Edward Marshall died intestate November 7, 1789, at the age of 79 years. He was the father of twenty-one children, fifteen of whom, six sons and nine daughters, with his wife survived him. His body lies buried in the Marshall-Ridge-Cooper graveyard in Tinicum Township, near Erwinna, about three miles from his island home.

"This cemetery is located on a tract of 164 acres, 130 perches of land which Marshall purchased March 1, 1738, six months after the Indian Walk, and where he lived before moving to Northampton County. His grave is marked by a simple marble tombstone, which is fast falling into decay. His widow, born 1727, died October 12, 1807, aged 80 years, is buried alongside of him in the same graveyard. His rifle is in the museum of the Bucks County Historical Society at Doylestown, Pa."

That island in the Delaware where Marshall lived for so many years is well known to Trenton boys, for since 1919 it has been the Trenton Y. M. C. A. camp for boys, renamed Camp Wilson in honor of James J. Wilson, who bought and gave it to the Y. M. C. A.

The Trenton boys who through the years since 1919 have spent a portion of their summer vacations on the island are thoroughly familiar with the story of Marshall and the part he played in the famed Walking Purchase.

Besides murdering Marshall's wife and children, the Indians gave expression to their anger and resentment for many years. In 1755 the massacre in Northampton County and the burning of many homes of white settlers is attributed to the dissatisfaction engendered by the Walking Purchase, and for long periods, as often as it was possible, the red men slaughtered the settlers. In the Pennamite Wars, which grew out of the controversy between Pennsylvania and Connecticut over land rights, the Indians allied themselves with Connecticut, and one factor in their fighting on the side of the French in the French and Indian War of 1755 to 1760 is their brooding sense of the wrong done them by the whites in 1737.

In 1890 the Bucks County Historical Society erected at Wrightstown a field stone monument to mark the start of that walk. On a stone at the base of the ivy-colored shaft are the words:

To the Memory of the Lenni Lenape Indians

Ancient Owners of this Region
These stones are placed at this spot
The starting point of the Indian Walk
September 19, 1737

On October 23, 1925, another stone was unveiled in Springfield Township, to mark the luncheon place of the walkers at noon on the first day. The unveiling was attended by many notables of public life in Pennsylvania and also by Chief Strong Wolf, an Ojib-way Indian, who was one of the orators on the occasion and who passed around the Pipe of Peace which was smoked by all on the platform. The Springfield monument is a more impressive affair than the simple shaft at Wrightstown and bears a bronze marker on its face, telling in brief the story of the event it commemorates.

At Wrightstown the monument stands in a peaceful spot, adjoining the ancient Meeting House and Friends' graveyard. The Meeting House, built 1787, is a happier witness to the Friends than the stone shaft. It is lovingly preserved and within its ancient walls, Friends, young and old from that Quaker region assemble for First Day service.

Few changes have been made within the Meeting House from that far-away day when it was erected, and the pine wood that forms the wainscoting of the walls, the old, none too comfortable benches and partitions is rubbed to a beautiful polish by the hands of generations of Friends.

Around the Meeting House there reaches out for mile after mile the gently rolling countryside, where fertile fields and pleasant homes testify to the contentment and happiness of the present-day settlers, descendants of those very men and women who were mute spectators of the start of that infamous walk which defrauded the once friendly Indians and brought sorrow and bloodshed to the community.

It is the spirit of William Penn rather than of his less noble son Thomas that moves today over the valley that as long as history of Pennsylvania endures will be inseparably associated with the Lenni Lenape, the Penns and the quiet Friends.
